

One of the most admirable characteristics of Millersville University is our strong sense of community. I felt this during my first visit to campus and this feeling hasn't changed after almost two years.

A community is a group of people with a common purpose and values. Our common purpose, no matter where you serve on campus or at what level of the organization, is to serve our students to the best of our ability.

Unfortunately, communities such as ours occasionally face tragedy and sadness. Our Marauder family experienced such sorrow last week with the passing of Huong So, a 24-year-old sophomore majoring in business administration. She was a friendly and talented student whom I was fortunate to know through her work in dining services. We go forward this semester with a remembrance of her spirit and a rededication to all of our students.

In this edition of my newsletter, I focus on several aspects of our community. We showcase the hard work of our students, faculty, and staff that culminated in our campus being selected to receive the 2020 Carnegie Community Engagement Classification. And we highlight one of our community-engaged faculty members, Dr. Carrie Smith, an associate professor of sociology, who epitomizes community service with her recent election to the Millersville Borough Council.

Inclusion is one of our community's EPPIC values, and the celebration of Black Heritage Month recognizes the culture, heritage and experiences of the black community with a wide variety of programs. In the past few days, I have had the pleasure of attending the inaugural Black Excellence Ball and the Carter G. Woodson Lecture.

Finally, I encourage all of you to participate in our One Day Give tomorrow, February 27. Every gift goes a long way to support our students. Together, let's make this a great day of philanthropy for our community.

PRESTIGIOUS CARNEGIE COMMUNITY ENGAGEMENT CLASSIFICATION

Thanks to the hard work of our staff and faculty, Millersville University has been selected to receive the 2020 Carnegie Community Engagement Classification. The reclassification highlights our focus on students. Working with faculty on community-based research, service-learning, and volunteerism deepens students' understanding and academic preparation.

Though there are many examples of how Millersville meets the requirements of our reclassification, let me share a few. The University's involvement as a community partner in the Southwest Lancaster Neighborhood Revitalization initiative, as well as collaborations with the School District of Lancaster and with thm a i ve y and v it e N

Dr. Smith serves as an important figure in our community, and she will assist us in keeping the lines of communication open between the Borough and the University.

STEINWAY ARTIST & TOUR

There are only about 1,800 pianists in the world who are certified as official Steinway Artists and we are lucky to have one on our faculty at Millersville University. Dr. Xun Pan of the Tell School of Music received the honor while touring in China at the end of 2019.

It's exactly this kind of prestige that so many of our faculty members bring to our classrooms as they teach and mentor our students. Our music students benefit from Dr. Pan's vast experience and expertise, and he further enriches our campus community by talking about Millersville University wherever he goes as a performer and visiting professor.

I encourage everyone to hear Dr. Pan perform on one of the stops of his current tour. To honor Ludwig van Beethoven's 250th birthday, he will perform all of the composer's 32 piano sonatas, 10 piano and violin sonatas, five piano and cello sonatas and three variations. The tour will take him around the world—to Europe, North and South America, New Zealand and China. He will perform at the Ware Center on Feb. 29, and I hope many of you can make it.

BLACK HISTORY/HERITAGE MONTH

Black History/Heritage Month is underway at Millersville University with more than 30 events to recognize the culture, heritage, and experiences of the black community. I hope you have stopped by one of the countless film showings, game nights, and discussions that have happened throughout February. Just this past weekend, the University hosted our inaugural Black Excellence Ball in the Bolger Conference Center where students dressed up and were able to celebrate Black Heritage Month in style.

Inclusion is an important part of our EPPIIC Values, and one of my highest priorities is to create a campus community where differences are welcomed and respected. Celebrations like Black Heritage Month help advance that goal, and it is important for us as a community to participate for solidarity and understanding.

The month isn't over yet. There are a lot more events planned! Don't miss a viewing of the new film, "Harriet", tonight at 7 p.m. in the Student Memorial Center. Tomorrow, a group of students will travel to Washington, D.C. to visit the National African American History and Culture Museum, which promises to be a great learning experience. It's a busy week and you can choose from Black History/Heritage Month events as well as from all events at the 'Ville.
